With a more positive outlook for autumn, confidence should continue to return to the housing market, as inflation remains under control and interest rates are now taking their first steps downwards.

Setting the scene

The property market has remained active, if a little subdued, over the summer. However, the first bank rate cut in four years, along with subsequent accelerated mortgage rate drops, has resulted in a boost to buyer activity, providing a more solid foundation for the potential for stronger sales as we enter the colder months. The number of potential buyers contacting estate agents about homes for sale has increased from 11% year-on-year in July to 19% since the start of August (Rightmove). Increased political certainty and an improved economic outlook has also contributed to improving housing market sentiment.

Solid activity

The housing market has proved resilient and fared better than many expected at the start of the year. Despite the added dynamic of the General Election, consumer confidence remains buoyant. Mortgage approvals for house purchases in the UK reached 62,000 in July, their highest level in almost two years. This represents a 2.3% increase from the previous month and a 26% rise compared to a year ago (Bank of England). With improving sentiment, the latest consensus forecast predicts 2.2% house price change through 2024, up from a 2024 forecast of -2.2% at this time last year (HM Treasury Average of Independent Forecasts).

Transactions building

Stable prices offer welcome increased certainty to buyers and sellers, in this context there is an expectation that transaction activity will increase. Transaction levels in July were 6.7% higher than a year ago (HMRC). Markets are pricing in a further interest rate cut this year, meaning transaction volumes are expected to be stronger than autumn last year. Almost a third (32%) of agents say transaction levels are higher than three months ago (Dataloft by PriceHubble (Poll of Subscribers)). In line with this sentiment, expectations for sales volume for the next three months have reached their most upbeat level since January 2020 (RICS).

Rental growth rates moderating

This time of year is typically very busy for the lettings market and competition remains strong. Letting agents are receiving 17 enquiries for every rental property, over double the 8 this time in 2019 (Rightmove). However, affordability is becoming increasingly stretched and rental growth is showing signs of moderating from the unsustainable highs over the last few years. Rents grew 5.2% annually in July, almost halved from 10.3% a year ago (HomeLet).

The government has confirmed plans to require all rented properties in England to have a minimum EPC rating of C by 2030. Over the past 12 months, only 56% of rental properties met this standard, a third of lets were in homes with a D rating, while 10% were E or below (Dataloft Rental Market Analytics, MHCLG).

Analysis by Dataloft

House prices have been tentatively rising over the course of the year, helping reverse 2023's declines. With the recent rate cut and positive inflation data, market activity is expected to improve. However, increases in prices will remain constrained by still stretched affordability.

Inflation under control

Starting the year at 4.0%, inflationary pressures have slowly and thankfully come under control and are close to their 2.0% target (ONS). CPI inflation was 2.2% in July 2024, a slight increase on the month before mainly due to energy prices falling less this year than they did in July 2023 under the Ofgem price cap. Looking ahead, inflation is forecast to remain relatively close to the 2% target, but to end the year at 2.5%<sup>1</sup>.

Interest rate

The Bank of England delivered its first interest rate cut in more than four years, taking the rate from 5.25% to 5%. The Governor has emphasised a cautious approach, highlighting that 'we need to make sure inflation stays low and be careful not to cut 'too quickly or by too much'. One, or possibly two cuts are expected before the end of 2024, currently forecast to reach 4.75% by the year end<sup>2</sup>.

Mortgage rates falling

Mortgage rates, which were already declining in the weeks leading up to the Bank Rate cut, have recently dropped even further. Mortgage rates now have fallen for three consecutive months<sup>3</sup> and are expected to decrease further throughout 2024. Major lenders are now offering deals with rates below 4%. It will take some more cuts to the Bank Rate before affordability for home movers is notably improved, but sentiment and optimism is heightened, setting up a positive autumn market.

NATIONAL MARKET CONDITIONS

After beginning the year with a moderation of -1.7%, annual house price growth has recovered to 2.7% in June, bringing the average price of a property to £287,927 (ONS, UK HPI). This is the first month in 14 months that all UK regions are recording positive annual price growth. Buyers are currently paying a greater proportion of the asking price, 96.8%, up from 95.6% last October (Zoopla). This is on par with the long-term average. However, despite increased buyer activity levels compared to last year, buyers are still stretched, so sellers must still come to the market with a realistic price.

SOUTHERN HOME COUNTIES

The average estate agent has 33 homes for sale, 16% higher than a year ago (Zoopla). Improved supply and more buyers in the market has resulted in a more balanced housing market, with higher sales volumes but more stable price inflation. Two thirds of agents report that there are three or more prospective buyers for each of their properties currently available, compared to 55% when the same question was asked the previous quarter (DataLoft by PriceHubble (poll of subscribers)). At 2%, annual property price growth in the South East has improved from -4% at the start of the year (UK HPI). Looking ahead, continued modest house price growth is expected for the remainder of the year, with stronger increases possible outside of expensive regions like the South East due to lower affordability pressures.

Location, location, location

Three years after the final lockdown restrictions were lifted, house hunters are once again prioritizing location over space, a shift from the previously well-documented 'race for space'.

Transport links were rated as the sixth most important factor when choosing a property, rising eight places from 2021 and ranked important by 74% of buyers. Buyers now value transport links more than square footage, which has dropped to seventh place, down from second in 2021 (Market Financial Solutions).

Properties selling faster

As more buyers enter the market and stock levels improve, the average time to sell has been getting shorter, reaching an average of 59 days in July (Rightmove). According to Zoopla, two-bedroom terraced homes are selling the fastest, with 60% of sales for this property type being agreed within 30 days of listing. Their limited availability, making up just 7% of listings in the past three months, adds to their appeal and drives competition among buyers.
